

“They did it right, like it was their own home.”

Amanda Caines, a mother of three, had a run of bad luck. Her home was falling apart, she'd lost her job, gone through a divorce and suffered a knee injury.

Luckily, she got help improving her home through Frontier Housing. They sent 18 people who helped make repairs. Fleming-Mason works with Frontier Housing to provide materials that increase energy efficiency of homes for people like Amanda.

If your home is in desperate need, contact Fleming-Mason Energy or Frontier Housing. If you qualify for assistance, they may be able to help. They don't exist to make money, but to improve lives.
